

Lurid Beauty: Australian Surrealism and its EchoesGROUND LEVEL, THE IAN POTTER CENTRE: NGV AUSTRALIA, FEDERATION SQUARE*9 OCT 2015 – 31 JAN 2016, OPEN 10AM–5PM DAILY

Surrealism was one of the most influential artistic movements of the 20th century. Noted for their experimental and playful approaches, and their exploration into the subconscious, Surrealist artists sought to challenge artistic conventions, opening their work to unexpected results and to the accidental image. Through techniques such as automatic drawing and collage, artists worked with the aim of liberating the unconscious mind to effect social and political revolution; others created hallucinatory and dream-like images to reveal their innermost desires.

Surrealism started in Europe in 1929 and soon spread around the world. It shook up the staid Australian art world of the 1930s, struck a chord with artists during the traumatic war years of the 1940s, and continued to appeal to artists during the 1950s who explored the movement through sculpture and biomorphic forms. Surrealism's echoes and reverberations continue to be felt into the present day, with its rich legacy evident in the practice of some of Australia's most exciting contemporary artists.

Lurid Beauty presents over 200 paintings, drawings, collages, sculptures, fashion, films and photographs as well as considering theatre and performance in an exuberant exploration of Surrealism and its profound influence on Australian art and creative life. Juxtaposing historical and contemporary works, the immersive exhibition will showcase the work of artists including James Cant, Albert Tucker, Max Dupain, Erik Thake, James Gleeson, Peter Booth, Julie Rrap, Pat Brassington, Anne Wallace and Tim Schultz.
